The Radical M. P. Laughs to Scorn "the Monkey Man."

From the Mail and Express.

The successful tilt which Mr. Labouche some time since indulged in with "Prof." Garner, popularly known as "the monkey man," has been renewed by the famous radical M. P. In the last issue of his weekly paper to reach this country he says: "The natives of the United States have the reputation of being a shrewd people, but a considerable section of them appear to have been completely humbugged by their still shrewder countryman, 'Prof.' Garner. According to the Inter-Ocean of Chicago, that intelligent exploiter of the language of apes is about to start on a fresh expedition to Africa, financed by a ner has money behind him this time will be specially welcome to the good missionment he spent the hundred days which he cage in the forest, and who (as recounted in Truth of December 27 last) still hold his dishonored promise to pay 500 france my hermit that ever lived in the Thebaio desert, he saw sights and heard sounds which no human being ever heard before. He felt secure, for his cage, though only six feet six inches square, was of lattice work, so narrow that no leopard or other animal could playfully reach in and claw him; besides, he had a magazine rife and two revolvers. Here, during a welrd African nights' entertainment, which lasted 112 nights, he listened with conflicting emotions to the light and airy persiflage of the waggish monkey and the abandoned language and dreadful oaths of the gorilla. He caught jungle fever a dozen times, but that did not discourage him; on the contrary, it made him feel more at home.'

"The purely imaginative character of all these statements, and the downright fiction of the story about the 112 nights spent in the cage, have been conclusively established by the evidence of the French missionaries with whom Garner sojourned as above described, by that of the French traveler Dybowski, and by the statements communicated to me by English merchants whose factories he visited. There is the clearest and most authentic evidence that the man only spent three nights in the cage; that the 'cage' was within a few minutes' walk of the convent where he was boarding; that when in the 'cage' he had a native boy for a companion; and that during the whole time he was in it no gorilla ever came near him. He has not produced an intelligible record of any observation made by him upon the language of apes in a state of nature; and the only observations he is able to speak of were made upon a tame monkey which he acquired by purchase. Garner's conduct itself tends to confirm the case against him. When he was in England I publicly invited him to supply the information which would have disposed of these stories. To this he offered no reply until he had got to the other side of the Atlantic, when his reply merely took the form of an expression of his desire to punch my head or skin me alive—I forget which. In the same spirit he replie

VISITING CARD SWINDLE. Place No Faith in the Feilow Who Says Your Friend Scat Him.
From the New York Hersld.
A most audacious enterprise has been undertaken and successfully carried out by a respectable-looking man in this city. He rang the bell of a city house the other day, and, presenting a visiting card, asked for the mistress, Mrs. Blank, saying that the woman whose card he offered had sent him. She was a dear friend of Mrs. Blank, so the latter listened willingly to the story the man had to tell.

He was the usual poor, but deserving, parent of urnumbered children. Mrs. Blank's friend had promised clothes and had sent him to her to see if she could give him work—if not, he was to go to Mrs. Dash, a common friend of the other two women.

"I can't give you employment," said Mrs. Blank, "but I will give you temporary help, at all events. Wait a moment and I will bring you down some money."

As she descended with her pocket book in hand the sew the man straithily remove some visiting cards from the receiver in the hall and slip them into his pocket.

"What are you doing that for?" she asked, her suspicions arcused.

The man looked up in consternation and fled without another word. Mrs. Dash's card, of course, had been obtained in the same way. man had to tell.

same way.

Mrs. Blank is now warning all her acquaintances to put no trust in any man who may present her card or use her name.

The Ulterior Motive. From the Chicago Record. "Say, Swipsey's gone."

"W'ere?" "Dey t'ink 'e's kidnaped."

"How? How? Who'd swipe such a kid?"
"Dat's all you know 'bout it. He swal-lowed a fi'-dollar piece yistiddy."
